Thoughts On Solitude

Let us consider the most intimate form of community: the community of two. Ever since St. Paul provided mentoring to his young assistant, St. Timothy, Christianity has recognized the power of personal guidance as a tool for helping believers grow in their faith. This has also been true among mystics and contemplatives. Mentoring and guidance were important elements in the spirituality of the Desert Fathers and Mothers; in fact, one of the founders of European monasticism, John Cassian, made the arduous (and dangerous) trip from Gaul (now France) to the deserts of Egypt to receive mentoring from the Desert Fathers.

The Cloud of Unknowing, a fourteenth century manual on contemplation, was written by a spiritual director for his young directee. Margery Kempe, writing in the early fifteenth century, described how she received spiritual direction from the reclusive Julian of Norwich. In sixteenth century Spain, Teresa of Avila provided spiritual guidance to John of the Cross, both of whom are now recognized as among the greatest of Christian mystics. In twentieth century England, Evelyn Underhill received mentoring from Friedrich von Hugel, well known for his writings on mysticism.

The ability to turn to an elder for advice and guidance has, unfortunately, not always been readily available to ordinary Christians – for many centuries, serious spiritual guidance was usually available only to clergy, nuns, or monks. But beginning in the mid-twentieth century, interest in spiritual formation among lay Christians has increased, as more and more people have sought spiritual mentoring, not only from clergy, monks, and nuns, but also from other laypersons. (This also marks the time when eremitical life began its remarkable revival). Thus, increasing numbers of Christians, both clergy and lay persons, are taking on the role of spiritual mentor and providing guidance to those who are interested in a deeper life of prayer.

Of course, full-time priests and ministers who have also been professionally trained (and who work full time for their churches) often provide spiritual mentoring to those who seek it. But not all priests and ministers have the time or the interest in such one-on-one guidance. Thus, personal spiritual mentoring is something that can also happen in the most informal of ways, and some of the best spiritual directors may not necessarily have any official training at all. Whenever two people with a shared interest in the spiritual life come together for mutual support and encouragement, one-on-one spiritual guidance can occur. At its most informal, such personalized spiritual support can even be shared between friends who are willing to listen to one another and respond to each other's spiritual journey with thoughtfulness and care.

In other words, spiritual friendship, regardless of how casual and informal it may be, can be just as valuable as a more formal mentoring or guidance relationship. The Celtic Christians had a special word to describe the beauty of this type of spiritual relationship: anamchara, meaning “soul-friend.”

For anyone interested in the Christian contemplative life, working with a spiritual director or cultivating a close relationship with a soul friend can be an integral part of one's spiritual journey. As beneficial as reading the writings of the great mystics or participating in group prayer may be, there are clear advantages to working with a wise mentor who can answer your particular questions and point out specific areas where your practice needs attention. A gifted spiritual director can be especially helpful in supporting a contemplative practice and helping one in any aspects of the spiritual life, including discerning God's will or call in life. A mentor can help you navigate the challenges of church membership and examine practical ways to integrate spirituality into the mundane aspects of your life. If you're serious about pursuing contemplative spirituality, try to find a trusted spiritual guide or soul friend...

When you embed your contemplative walk in a community setting, you are far less likely to relate to God as merely as merely a source of spiritual entertainment. A community and a soul friend or spiritual director, can help keep you honest and provide you with the support you need to remain focused on the true heart of Christian mysticism—learning to become a living manifestation of the love of God.

A Word From Still Wood

While keying in the submissions to this February issue of Raven's Bread, I became aware of the wonderful quietness surrounding me. Snow blanketed the mountain and seemed to absorb all sound. Even the birds were quieter for only sporadic cheeps and chirps were heard from among the hemlock branches which sheltered them. I recognized January as one of the Still Times of the year, ideal for letting go and letting be.

The question of "inner balance" comes up in this issue. One of the keys to maintaining our equilibrium is to not let time become a tyrant. Quite simply, there are two kinds of time – chronos (clock time) and kairos (God time). As hermits, we are called to live in the rhythm of kairos, not the rigidity of chronos. We set ourselves up for "dis-equilibrium" if we plan our day by the clock and impose arbitrary goals or deadlines on ourselves.

Many hermits have told us that early in their eremitic life, they had a daily plan scheduling every hour, assigning time-slots for prayer, labor, meals, reading, and personal care. Very neat... and quite unrealistic. Only after finding themselves full of anger, impatience, even desperation, as life (God?) frustrated their regimen over and over, did they begin to "get it".

In their efforts to have a place for everything and everything in its place, they had set themselves up for frustration. Their peace was dependent on following their routine and when it was interrupted, even slightly, the whole day was out of whack. Life is like that – it seldom happens according to our schedule. Only after they let go of excessive planning and looked at their daily life in terms of a rhythm, did they begin to experience that liberty which is one of the special charisms of eremitic life. As hermits we should be free to follow the Spirit whenever S/He breaks into our life. Only when we choose to forget time – and all our plans arranged in chronos – can we enter the dance with God in the divine rhythm – kairos. Forgetting to watch the clock and just flowing from one task to another liberates us and enfolds our spirit in peace. We are here to join in the great dance that is going on all around and within us. Such a dance definitely has a rhythm but it is not constrained by time. Why should we be?

A reader recently shared this: "Mr. Mike's Little Rule of Life". Less than a page and a-half, it has a luminous subtitle: "Life (read God) will fill in the details." We have never seen a Rule for a solitary that is more sensible or contemplative. All that is required is listening to God, loving what is heard, and dancing off to respond to whomever or whatever is calling! Following this Choreographer ensures that we shall always be well balanced, inwardly and outwardly.

Karen & Paul*

CONGRATULATIONS! SARAH SEYMOUR-WINFIELD of Fairborn, OH, announces that, after twenty years of intensive work, her book, Images, Old and New about mystical evolution is finally finished and is due to be published in April/May 2011. Five people have critiqued it recently, two Catholic priests, one educated in the Vatican, one Protestant clergyman and two others. Each reported that he had a profound spiritual experience while reading it. It is being endorsed by the Rev. Dr. Thomas E. Boomershine, internationally respected Scripture scholar and multi-published author. She is uncertain of the exact cost but the 400 page volume should run between $22 and $30 in soft cover. Sarah says: "It was challenging to write and is challenging to read. If anyone is curious and would like to reserve a copy, please notify me at the following address. Those hermits, anchorites and possibly prisoners, who cannot afford such a lengthy work, may contact me directly and I will make arrangements with each personally. New books BY Raven's Bread Readers:

IMAGES OLD AND NEW by Sarah L. Seymour-Winfield This volume, a work of love, is a dramatic tour de force, tracing mystical evolution through images drawn from Old and New Testaments, enriched by stories from world literature, as well as Greek and Roman mythology. The author's gift for poetry and poetic prose helps the reader to enter into the mysteries of which she writes. She also employs the writings of Meister Eckhart, St. Symeon the New Theologian, John of the Cross, and Soren Kierkegaard to flesh out the development of Christian mysticism through the ages and foreshadowing the future evolution of the Church and Christianity. It is a dense book, well worth the challenge of reading it. (See Raven's Forum for purchase information)

INVITATION TO WONDER, a journey through the seasons by Elizabeth Ayres. Anyone who wishes to see nature with new eyes should read this gentle, sensual and surprising volume of reflections on the world around the Chesapeake Bay.
